

CALL FOR PAPERS

The next issue of the Journal of Mediterranean and Balkan Intelligence will focus on the topic of “The Intelligence-Law Enforcement Nexus in the Current Global Security Environment: Lessons Learned and Best/Worst Practices”.

The current global security context is complex and protean, involving both traditional threats posed by state actors, and non-traditional threats, posed by non-aligned individuals or/and networks of terrorists and organized criminals. Such a multifarious security environment calls for highly effective network-like responses from intelligence agencies and law enforcement organizations. There are several lessons-learned regarding establishing a linkage between the intelligence sector (as first in line of defence against any threat) and law enforcement agencies (as the institutions that investigate and bring perpetrators to justice), from various countries or collective security organizations that might prove useful should some other nations or alliances become interested in pursuing a similar path. There are also negative examples, which nations should avoid. The purpose of this JMBI edition is to describe and analyze these endeavours aimed at knitting the intelligence and law enforcement agencies better together.
