Turkey Says to Go Elsewhere if U.S. Won't Sell It F-35 Jets

Turkey will go elsewhere if the United States does not allow it to buy Lockheed Martin's F-35 jets, Foreign Minister Mevlut Cavusoglu was quoted as saying by broadcaster NTV and other media on Wednesday. A U.S. Senate committee last week passed its version of a $716 billion defense policy bill, including a measure to prevent Turkey from purchasing the jets, further straining already tense relations between the NATO allies.

Turkey, Pakistan reach their largest-ever defense contract

Turkey and Pakistan have agreed on the sale of a batch of 30 Turkish-made T129 ATAK multirole combat helicopters, Turkish officials have said. A government election manifesto revealed by Turkish President Recep Tayyip Erdogan said Turkey and Pakistan “just recently” agreed on the contract, which is the largest-ever Turkish-Pakistani defense contract.

Europe banks ALERT: Turkey on brink of COLLAPSE as Lira PLUMMETS threatening Euro crisis

(RECOMMENDED) As of last week, the lira was down 17 percent against the US dollar for the year, spooking global investors as many banks have borrowed money from Turkish companies. On Tuesday, the currency rallied, jumping 5.2 percent on the US dollar to trade at TL4.467 - its strongest week since 2009 - but still down 15.3 percent for the year. According to figures from the Bank of International Settlements, which measures financial and credit flows, global banks have lent just under €200billion to Turkey.

Fears of foul play hang over Turkey’s critical elections

As the June 24 presidential and parliamentary polls approach, Turkey’s opposition parties are concerned about possible foul play in the critical race, which is looming as the toughest election battle for the government yet.

Turkey slams Macron over Erdogan magazine cover support

Turkey's Foreign Minister Mevlut Cavusoglu has slammed French President Emmanuel Macron over his support for a French magazine's cover calling President Recep Tayyip Erdogan a "dictator".

Erdogan’s ‘pious generation’ goal drives Islam into education

For the 100th week running, parents stand with protest signs in front of Ismail Tarman, a public middle school that caters to students aged 10 to 14, in the midst of a battle between advocates of religious and secular education in Turkey. “We are here until the injustice is over” reads one of the signs held by the protesters who have been fighting for two years against the “Islamisation” of their children’s school.

Erdogan Is Failing Economics 101

To Recep Tayyip Erdogan’s handlers, it must have seemed like a good idea at the time. Show off Turkey’s president to a group of London bankers and fund managers over a fancy lunch as a way to reassure nervous investors about the country’s economic stability and viability. After all, Turkey’s Central Bank had recently upped interest rates a higher-than-expected 75 basis points, showing a measure of fiscal prudence at a time of lingering questions about the country’s economic health.

Turkey and US agree plan for YPG withdrawal from Syria's Manbij (RECOMMENDED)

Turkey and the United States have agreed on a roadmap for Syria's Manbij that would see the Kurdish YPG militia leave the northern city, Turkey's Anadolu Agency said on Wednesday. US support of the Kurdish People's Protection Units (YPG) has enraged Washington's NATO partner Turkey, which considers the militia part of the outlawed Kurdistan Workers' Party (PKK). The YPG have played an integral part in efforts, supported by an international coalition, to roll back the Islamic State (IS) group in Syria. The PKK has waged a decades-long insurrection in Turkey.

The Islamization of Turkey (RECOMMENDED – PRIORITY)

Turkish President Recep Tayyip Erdoğan is focusing his Islamization policy on the education system in his bid to raise a “pious generation”. “Jihad” has become a frequent reference in the Turkish regime’s rhetoric, while Syrians in the country and in areas controlled by Turkish troops in northern Syria are eating off the same plate. The international community should act to stop a “Turkish bin Laden” in the making and al-Qaeda-like authoritarian rule.

Is Erdogan’s re-election a foregone conclusion?

Is Turkey’s strongman Recep Tayyip Erdogan’s re-election as president in the snap elections to be held June 24 a foregone conclusion? Almost every Turkey observer said it was when new Erdogan ally Devlet Bahçeli, the chairman of Turkey’s Nationalist Action Party, called for early elections and Erdogan heeded his call within 48 hours.

Germany moving to limit arms sales to Saudi Arabia, UAE, Turkey

A draft bill in Germany aims to ban weapons exports to Saudi Arabia, the United Arab Emirates (UAE) and Turkey for their involvement in military conflicts. The bill aims to prevent weapons exports and all other related goods and services to countries that may use them for human rights abuses.

Senate Bill To Ban F-35 Sales To Turkey An Unprecedented Attempt To Check Erdogan's Actions

(RECOMMENDED – PRIORITY)

A bipartisan bill introduced by Senators Lankford (R-OK), Tillis (R-NC), and Jeanne Shaheen (D-NH) would prevent the transfer of F-35s to Turkey and keep the country from establishing a maintenance depot for the stealth fighters. Turkey has been one of six prime F-35 partner nations since 2002 and one of its biggest customers, with 116 of the stealth fighters on order.

How Women Activists in Turkey Keep Fighting in a Climate of Fear

Last year, the Van Women’s Association in Turkey was about to sign a contract with the European Union for a project on preventing violence against women—one that would have catered for up to 8,000 women in 92 villages over a three-year period. Instead, the organization was closed down.

Here's why Turkey's snap election won't solve all the lira's problems

It will take more than a snap election to fix Turkey's fundamental economic problems or provide more than a temporary lift to the long-suffering lira. Turkey's currency got a boost last week from President Recep Tayyip Erdogan's surprise decision to call an early election for June 24 that he's expected to win. The poll pre-empts a scheduled November 2019 election and victory would grant Erdogan another five years in office. It would also allow him to take on expanded presidential powers that voters approved narrowly in a referendum last year and become effective after the election.

Fallout from the Turkey-Iran-Russia meeting

Iranian regime media is boasting after a successful summit in Turkey with the Turkish, Russian and Iranian presidents. But Iran was not the only winner at the meeting designed to discuss the future of Syria. Russia and Turkey both feel that they are achieving their goals in Syria at the expense of the US. While the three leaders met, Washington was still undecided on what to do in Syria where it has soldiers and bases and is working to defeat Islamic State.

Turkey: 14 Cumhuriyet staff sentenced on 'terror' charges

A Turkish court has handed prison sentences to 14 staff of the Cumhuriyet opposition newspaper on "terrorism" charges, and acquitted three others, according to state media. The sentences for those convicted on Wednesday by the Istanbul-based court ranged from two-and-a-half years to seven-and-a-half years.

Turkey: Government crackdown suffocating civil society through deliberate climate of fear

A sustained and escalating crackdown curtailed the vital work of human rights defenders in Turkey and left swathes of society in a state of constant fear, a new report from Amnesty International has revealed. The report, Weathering the storm: Defending human rights in Turkey's climate of fear, reveals how few areas of Turkey's once vibrant independent civil society have been left untouched by the ongoing state of emergency. A nationwide crackdown has resulted in mass arrests and dismissals, the hollowing out of the legal system and the silencing of human rights defenders through threats, harassment and imprisonment.

How President Erdogan Is Turning Turkey Into Putin's Russia

As Turkey gears up for snap elections on June 24, the country's president Recep Tayyip Erdogan faces a problem: Turkish society is profoundly polarized. Despite his efforts to build a stable majority as the foundation of his right-wing regime, his policies of demonizing centrist and leftist groups mean that half of Turkey opposes him vehemently and seems determined not to accept him as leader.

Turkey rejects Trump's description of 1915 events

Turkey on April 25 rejected United States President Donald Trump's "inaccurate expressions and the subjective interpretation of history" regarding the 1915 events, according to a statement by the Foreign Ministry. President Donald Trump issued an annual commemoration of the 1915 events using the Armenian term "Meds Yeghern" ("Great calamity" in Armenian) in a statement on April 24.

Turkey-Greece tensions: What comes next ?

Ankara and Athens are passing through a delicate period as their warplanes and boats face off in disputed airspace and maritime zones. Here is the historical background of the tensions and Ankara's approach to its neighbour.

Erdogan's Motley Opponents Have United to Take Him Down

President Recep Tayyip Erdogan, the dominant figure of Turkish political life for the last 15 years, stunned his country last week by moving up crucial presidential and parliamentary elections from November 2019 to June 24. Erdogan hopes to complete his transformation of the government from a parliamentary to a presidential system, and he succeeded at catching the opposition off guard.

Erdogan's Revenge and the Kurdish Dilemma (Recommended - Priority)

Arriving in Baghdad, it is clear who has won the Iraq War. The Shia are in charge. Tower-sized, luminous green posters of Husseyn and Ali define the landscape, draped from Brezhnevite tower blocks, augmented by portraits of martyred fighters in identical uniforms, with a prominent place for Nimr Baqir al-Nimr, the Shia cleric executed by the Saudis. These are reproduced in miniature on every soldier's hut at checkpoints throughout the city.

Erdogan's Shadow Army (RED FLAG)

In the collapsed and fragmented space that comprises much of today's Middle East, the key to success increasingly lies in the ability to combine political strategy with military muscle, under a single banner and in a single structure. Examples abound.... Turkey is the latest country to enter this crucial, if shadowy, field. The SADAT Defense Consultancy, founded on February 28, 2012 by former Brigadier General Adnan Tanriverdi, is Ankara's instrument in this area. Its activities are testimony both to the changing nature of the Turkish state, and to the process by which power and influence are currently built and held in the Middle East.

Commission says Turkey made 'big steps away' from EU: Report

Turkey is doing worse than before in its efforts to join the EU, according to the European Commission's forthcoming accession progress report, German paper Die Welt reported. "Turkey has made big steps away from the EU," the Commission concludes in a draft report on Turkey's efforts, according to the paper. The assessment finds that Turkey has taken significant steps backward "in the areas of justice, public administrative reform, fundamental rights and freedom of expression."

NATO chief calls for more support to Turkey ahead of his visit

NATO Secretary General Jens Stoltenberg has called on all allies to provide more support to Turkey, ahead of his official visit to the country scheduled for April 16 with the purpose of preparing the upcoming NATO summit in Brussels in July.

With Islamization, Erdogan Is Reshaping Atatürk's Turkey

Turkey has been a bastion of secularism in the Middle East for much of the 20th century. However, after 16 years under President Recep Tayyip Erdogan's Justice and Development Party (AKP), accusations of Islamization are widespread.... Under Erdogan, Ankara has done much to encourage a more pious and conservative society. Taxes on alcohol and cigarettes are among the highest in the world, driving some to brew their own booze, compulsory religious teaching is more widespread in schools and official rhetoric is laden with messages extolling 'national morals'.

Turkish court rules US pastor will remain in custody amid coup trial

A court in Turkey has ruled to keep an American pastor in custody, saying that he was a potential flight risk as he went on trial in a case that has compounded strains in US-Turkish relations.

Cracks in Turkey-Russia-Iran alliance

Turkey, Iran, and Russia showed varying reactions to the U.S., Britain and France launched joint airstrikes in Syria on Saturday in response to a suspected chemical attack on civilians by Syrian President Bashar Assad's government.

A 'secret war' between Turkey and Greece just turned deadly after a long history of dogfights over the Aegean Sea

A Greek fighter jet crashed and the pilot was killed after intercepting two Turkish F-16 fighters that had intruded into Greek airspace. The pilot, identified by the HAF as 33-year-old Capt. Giorgos Baltadoros, was returning from an aerial policing mission where he intercepted two Turkish Air Force F-16s.

Turkey Suffers for Erdogan's Insecurity

On July 31st, 1959, 28 months after the original six signatories, Belgium, the Federal Republic of Germany, France, Italy, Luxembourg, and the Netherlands, had signed the Treaty of Rome, Turkey applied for associate membership in the European Economic Community (EEC). Since that time, Turkey's goal was to achieve full membership in the EEC, then, it became to obtain membership in the European Union (EU). The benefits that Turkish citizens would gain have been coveted for many years. Understanding that membership would threaten his leadership, Turkey's President Recep Tayyip Erdogan has sought to dash that hope. Erdogan's domestic and foreign policies have followed a line to deny that end.

Erdogan Says Those Attempting to Wage 'Economic Terror' Will Pay

Turkish President Recep Tayyip Erdogan said his government will punish anyone attempting to exploit developments in neighboring Syria in order to wage "economic terrorism" on Turkey.... Erdogan's remarks came after the lira weakened to new records against the dollar and euro this week, and the stock market slumped, triggered in part by the threat of U.S. military action against Syria. The lira is the second worst-performing emerging-market currency against peers over the past three months, trailing only the sanctions-afflicted Russian ruble.

Erdogan: Turkey to keep pushing Kurds out of Syria's north

Turkish President Recep Tayyip Erdogan said Wednesday that his military "won't stop" trying to oust Syrian Kurdish fighters from northern Syria, as he met with the leaders of Russia and Iran for talks on trying to resolve the conflict.

Erdogan rebuffs Moscow's call to hand Afrin to Syrian government

Turkish President Recep Tayyip Erdogan on Tuesday rejected a call by Moscow to hand control of Afrin province to the Syrian government, saying Ankara would withdraw its forces when it felt the time was right.

- Israel to Erdogan after Jerusalem tirade: Days of Ottoman Empire are over

Turkish President Recep Tayyip Erdogan called on Muslims worldwide to “defend al-Aksa,” as the government’s decision late Monday night to remove controversial metal detectors at the site did not have an immediate calming effect. Erdogan issued a blistering attack on Israel at a meeting in Turkey’s parliament of his AKP Party. “Israel has taken a dangerous path. By occupying the al-Aksa Mosque, Israel has exceeded the boundaries,” the Turkish president said, adding that Ankara recognizes “Palestine” with a capital in east Jerusalem and Israel with its capital in Tel Aviv.

- Here’s how we can make Turkey’s president pay a price for his crackdown on journalists

Recep Tayyip Erdogan, Turkey’s ruler for 15 years, has established himself as Turkey’s most consequential leader since Mustafa Kemal Ataturk, the republic’s founder. But while Ataturk’s legacy was to orient Turkey toward the West and lay a foundation upon which successors could cultivate democracy, religious tolerance and a reasonably free press, Erdogan seeks the opposite: He has placed Turkey firmly in the Islamic bloc and increasingly prefers Russia over NATO. He fans the flames of religious incitement not only against Jews and Christians, but also against Muslims who reject his more conservative views.

- Turkey’s NATO Exit & the New Turkey-Russia Alliance: A Turning Point in the Global Power Structure

Newsbud Roundtable presents Sibel Edmonds, James Corbett and Spiro Skouras. In this in-depth discussion Sibel and James peel back the layers and dive deep into the current events surrounding Turkey, Russia, the United States and NATO. We elaborate and provide analysis of the escalation of U.S.-Turkey relations, the new Turkey-Russia alliance, and Turkey’s bold move to exit NATO. Our discussion includes the Balkans and Russia wild card, Syria, the Kurdish question, and much more.

The same period has seen 9,426 Syrian migrants, 5,311 Pakistani migrants and 4,270 Iraqi migrants.
- Turkey: Erdogan lashes out at France warning of 'more terror attacks'
Recep Tayyip Erdogan has hit out at the French government for “providing support to terrorism”, and appeared to refer to Saturday’s vehicle attack in Germany by warning “the same will happen in France”. Speaking on Saturday afternoon as the drama was still unfolding in Muenster, Turkey’s President appeared to assume the attack was an act of political extremism. “You are seeing what is happening in Germany, right? The same will happen in France,” he told a meeting of supporters during a visit to the southwestern province of Denizli. “The West will not be able to free itself from terror. The West will sink as it feeds these terrorists.”

Greece said on Monday that Turkey appeared to be seeking some political leverage by continuing to hold two of its soldiers without trial for a month since they crossed a land border between the two countries. The border guards were detained after crossing the frontier in a heavily forested area in north-eastern Greece in bad weather on March 1.

- Turkey Overheating Means Race Against Time for Erdogan

The Turkish economy is overheating. That could be a problem for President Recep Tayyip Erdogan as much as it is for the nation's creditors. The lira is buckling under the weight of a ballooning current-account deficit and double-digit inflation after its $851-billion gross domestic product expanded 7.4 percent last year, faster than any other major economy. Erdogan, who's seeking to formalize effective one-man rule at an election next year, needs to make sure any turbulence doesn't thwart his chances. But signs of trouble are growing.
