Had Europeans realized, when immigration from Turkey, Morocco, Algeria, and elsewhere began in the 1950s and 1960s, that there would be thousands of mosques across Europe half a century later, they would never have permitted it.

I believe that adulterers should be stoned to death. I believe that we should cut the hands off of thieves. I believe the Sharia should be implemented in Denmark. Maybe we should change the Christiansborg Palace [the Danish Parliament building] to Muslimsborg to have the flag of Islam flying over the parliament in Denmark. I think this would be very nice.

Anjem Choudary, radical imam in Britain

Invoking history is fashionable these days in Europe. That is fine. The only problem though is that this invoking the past is done in the wrong context and for the wrong reasons.

From Mrs. Merkel's standpoint, for example, history is (or, was until her recent electoral fiasco) the justification for allowing Moslem illegal immigration to breach borders and invade Europe's heart in the summer of 2015.

From the standpoint of left-wing liberalism, the history of Islam as a mortal threat against the Christian West does not exist.

From the standpoint of those who have dedicated a lifetime to entrenching political correctness and multi-culti “inclusiveness,” not to mention “diversity is our strength,” as the prime progressive measures of European societies in the postwar years, Moslem “moderates,” their laughable theory insists, comprise the guarantee of a peaceful Islamic future in European countries with thousands of mosques, and as many radical imams, populating the land.

Those who see the history of Islam and the West through different (read: pragmatic) lenses do not fare well. They are routinely demonized as racist. They are pronounced bigots. They are accused of fomenting “ethnic wars.” Their careers suffer terribly or are destroyed forever.

And then the warnings of these incorrigible “haters” turn out to be almost moderate in the face of extreme Islamic terrorism and its crimes against humanity.

Brussels March 2016 goes down in this history of moral cowardice and suicidal tendencies as yet another escalation of the Islamic war on Europe—a Europe that is nervous, divided, undecided, anxious and fracturing fast as successive, pleasing illusions shatter into a thousand pieces in airports, on trains and subways, in the streets and in cafes but, also, in summit meetings, “friendship offensives,” and pathetic efforts to appease a whole religious world motivated by holy wrath against decadent, infidel societies, which must be eliminated to please a god.

The arrest of Salah Abdeslam, chief organizer of the November 2015 Paris attacks that killed 130 people and wounded scores, intelligence services feared, would trigger action from other Moslem terrorist cells. They were right.

Every such outrage causes more frantic government action, more emergency meetings, more troops in the streets, more police at the “open” borders, and more hand wringing at the “fracturing” of “multicultural peace.”

But, still, the core of the problem remains untouched as fearful, appeasing politicians retreat and a restive, fearful public opinion is chastised for being “intolerant.”

Europe refuses to look the threat in the eye and recognize that what took centuries of violence and bloodletting to stop has re-emerged with terrorist passion and endangers the very fabric of Western democracies.

No doubt, a true call to arms against Moslem terror would be dismissed by the “humanists” and the “cool-headed” all across the continent as fear mongering, racist “lust,” a return to the days of Adolf Hitler, and so much more.

Their case though is fraying fast. And the one certain outcome of this disintegration of their illusionary universe will be the intensification of their feckless “peace offensive” to build “bridges” with communities that remain barricaded and separate from their host societies and leave no opportunity unexploited to help the “martyrs” cause mayhem and destruction upon the infidel.

Where does Greece stand in all of this?

Greece, with the help of Islamic Turkey and the terrified, sweaty-palmed European governments begging the Ankara to help in stemming the flood of Moslem illegals, is being methodically colonized by “irregular migrants” and “refugees,” all of them Moslem.

The country is already hosting over 50,000 such unwanted by the rest of Europe. By the end of this coming summer, this number could be as high as 200,000, if the current rate of illegal entries holds fast. If it increases, sky’s the limit.

A laughingstock of an “agreement” with Turkey guarantees increasing waves of people desperate to advance on the European more prosperous core but prevented of doing so and left corralled inside Greece. No amount of hypocritical “negotiation” and cosmetic tweaking in the ludicrous pantomime with Ankara will change this.

For the time being, Turkey has the European dis-Union exactly where it wants it: cowering and pleading and willing to lift visa restrictions that will allow close to 80 million (Moslem) Turks to enjoy unencumbered access to Europe.

Meantime, and unbeknownst to the majority of Greeks, their country is now a member of the exclusive club of European lands most menaced by Islamic terrorism. The reasons why are not difficult to see:

1. The Athens government is by ideology, custom, practice, personal idiosyncrasies, and political tradition unable to plot an effective security strategy and pursue it with all possible speed.
2. SYRIZA's street-level anarchist heritage is fundamentally opposed to protecting the despised "bourgeois state," especially against "oppressed minorities."
3. Greek leftism, with its virulent opposition to "clericalism," "obsolete values," non-moron education, and inherent irrationality on everything, from the laws of the universe to the price of a bus ticket, is the perfect vehicle for outside "martyrs" to use as a springboard.
4. Caught unprepared (as always) Greece finds herself the sinkhole for Moslem populations nobody wants in Europe; claimed European "assistance" is a succor lollipop offered to the unlucky Greeks, who will now need to run many "Ellis islands" (report in Greek) across their country, but without any open space beyond the Greek frontier to transfer the arriving angry multitudes for permanent settlement.
5. Already, the "irregulars" show restlessness at the prospect of being isolated inside a collapsing country. Fights among them have broken out, with token Greek "security" presence unable to do anything drastic lest "human rights" are violated. It is conceivable that, tomorrow, they will also vent outside their groups, with Greek "security" presence the most obvious, immediate target.
6. Greek government ministers continue in their dangerous dream world that sees a deadly crisis as a game of Monopoly on live television. They wax poetic on the need for "peaceful solutions" and devote rants to the reasons the Greek state cannot oblige "refugees" to move, if need forcibly, to guarded facilities for fear of resurrecting the "concentration camp."
7. Turkey has obtained the perfect opportunity to plant convenient radical "helpers" inside Greece to be available for any future cultural and religious exchanges in the form of subversive and separatist action, especially in Thrace.
8. European pressure to accommodate Islam as an integral part of Greece will increase exponentially in the effort to transform the country into a permanent holding pen for the “irregulars” without any further plan to change this status in the future.

9. Greek political divisions will deepen and the general dysfunction of what is left of public administration will advance another critical notch.

10. Ultimately, Greek national security, already frail, will move to the status of mere symbolism, irrespective of whether the European dis-Union collapses or not, leaving the country open, exposed, and undefended against the tide from the East.

Overall, European reaction to this latest Islamic terror outrage displays the standard features of European dis-Union watery practice: a flurry of announcements, statements, expressions of sorrow, waves of spokesperson press conferences declaring “unity” and solidarity” in the face of terror, and reports about how high and low bureaucrats, dispersed across European capitals, remain “alert” and “in conference,” but without any visible sign of generalized mobilization to pursue, discover, and neutralize other potential attackers before it is too late.

Unless Europe decides that, indeed, we are at war, there is little hope of doing anything practicable and effective against the threat.

Multi-culti “humanitarianism” has run its course with disastrous effect. Waiting for the other boot to drop would be the point of no return.

Does Europe have the guts?

PS: Israel, the pariah nation in the eyes of all of Europe, must be watching this unfolding disaster with a justified we-told-you-so attitude.

PS1: There is a lot to learn from Israel provided a sense of self-preservation and survival takes firm hold. Will Europe, and Greece, in particular, recognize this? The answer is: most unlikely under the present conditions of stultifying cultural insanity, rampant “diversity” indoctrination, appeasing Islam, and “progressive” domination. Expect the worst.
