Intelligence in the Era of Donald Trump: Impact and Prospects

Manuscripts submitted to the editors by 1 December 2021. Expected publication 30 January 2022

The Lessons of the COVID-19 Pandemic for Intelligence. By transforming security as we know it, the SARS-CoV-2 virus has forced the redirection of global intelligence resources to the aim of combatting the pandemic. Intelligence agencies the world over continue to operate on the front lines of the fight against the pandemic, with mixed success. The Journal of European and American Intelligence Studies is issuing a call for papers that examine the intersection between intelligence and biological challenges to security, with a focus on topics such as bio-security, bio-surveillance and bio-defense, among others.

Relevant topics include: ▪ bio-security ▪ bio-surveillance ▪ bio-defense ▪ medical intelligence ▪ critical intelligence ▪ strategic intelligence ▪ intelligence communications ▪ intelligence cooperation ▪ intelligence and telework ▪ intelligence logistics ▪ intelligence management ▪ scientific intelligence.

Intelligence in the Era of Donald Trump: Impact and Prospects. Donald Trump may not be president of the United States any more, but his presence – and impact – in global politics is far from over. His supporters and critics agree that his time at the White House has been transformational for American politics and government. In a subsequent issue, the Journal of European and American Intelligence Studies will feature papers that discuss Donald Trump's impact on intelligence in America and beyond, with an emphasis on – among other things – scope and operations, practitioner-policymaker relations, politicization, international cooperation, and effectiveness.

Relevant topics include: ▪ intelligence cooperation ▪ intelligence operations ▪ intelligence analysis ▪ inter-agency cooperation ▪ practitioner-policymaker relations ▪ military intelligence ▪ politicization of intelligence
